Symposium

Tracing the Evolution of Student Voice
Professor Alison Cook-Sather, Bryn Mawr and Haverford Colleges, Pennsylvania, USA.

PROGRAMME

1.00 - 2.00pm - Alison Cook-Sather

This address summarises the key developments in the evolution of student voice from early efforts in the 1990s to elicit student perspectives regarding their learning in primary and secondary schools, through to more current approaches to working with students as partners in, or as leaders of, educational research projects in primary through tertiary educational contexts. The address touches upon definitions and contexts of “student voice”; the relationship among voice, rights, and power; research methods that have evolved to integrate student voice and participation; the diversification of voices included in student voice research; and changes in (re)presentation of students in educational research.
