23.73 REPORT OF THE EDUCATION COMMITTEE

Received
The report of the Education Committee meeting held on 15 November 2023, as set out in document 23/436.

Noted in discussion
1. That the Cycle 6 Academic Audit report should be available publicly on the 14 December 2023.
2. That the trend towards more specialised degrees was noted. While there might be benefits in having specialised degrees, there was also a risk of splitting the student cohort and doubling up on teaching efforts and resourcing. It would be beneficial to take a more deliberate and conscious approach to considering this trend.
3. That all the Graduating Year Reviews submitted by the University had been approved by the Universities New Zealand Committee on University Academic Programmes.
4. That the new Paper Outlines tool had now been implemented and staff could start building outlines for 2024 papers. Te Puna Ako Centre for Tertiary Teaching and Learning (CeTTL) would be providing training and support on the new tool, with an initial focus on outlines being developed for papers starting in January 2024.

REPORTS OF THE DIVISIONAL BOARDS

Received
The reports of the Divisional Board meetings held on 2 – 6 October 2023, as set out in document 23/439-23/442.

DIVISION OF HEALTH PROPOSAL

Considered
Feedback to the Vice-Chancellor on the proposal to establish a Division of Health, as set out in document 23/443.

Noted in discussion
1. That student enrolments in health were projected to increase over the next few years with the success of the nursing programme, the introduction of Pharmacy and Midwifery programmes, and the possibility of a Medical School. The creation of a Division of Health was, therefore, becoming a necessity and the University Council provisionally supported this.
2. That it was anticipated that the Health, Engineering, Computing and Science divisional office would continue to provide support to the new division in the immediate future. In time, increased student numbers and workload could lead to these functions being split out into a divisional office for Health.
3. That it would be worthwhile having further discussions about how disciplines could collaborate across divisional boundaries in teaching and research. In addition, our degree structures should continue to support students in being able to take papers outside of their main field.
4. That the WSU were generally supportive of the proposal. Feedback from class representatives in Health was that issues they had been raising had not been satisfactorily addressed through current channels. The creation of a Division of Health might improve communication between staff and students and enable issues to be resolved more effectively.

5. That the science, computer science, and mathematics programmes remaining in the existing division were all financially viable in their own right and, therefore, shouldn’t be impacted financially by this proposal.

6. That there should be enough teaching space available for the increase in student numbers, however, consideration needed to be given to the challenge of student accommodation. Opportunities to partner with other organisations to provide student accommodation were being explored.

7. That the proposed developments for Health, particularly the inclusion of a School of Public Health, were very much aligned with the needs of the Pacific community.

23.78 FLEXI REVIEW REPORT

Reported
That consultation on the Flexi Review Report was undertaken with University Committees over the period of September to November 2023. Students were also consulted on the report and all staff were invited to provide feedback via the Staff Update in September 2023. The Flexi Review Report had been amended accordingly.

Received
1. A summary of the feedback received on the Flexi Review Report, and a response to this feedback, as set out in document 23/444.

Noted in discussion
1. That the FLEXI code may need to be retained for 2025 as it would be difficult to make changes to the code prior to 2026.
2. That the student experience was now vastly different to what it had been even three to four years ago. Students now needed flexible learning options to meet their, often complex, lives and the University needed to be responsive to this to ensure student retention and success. This might require redefining our traditional academic terms and structures.
3. That, as reflected in recommendation two in the report, students seeking flexibility wanted to have a known pathway of flexible programmes that they could complete their full qualification in.
4. That a balance needed to be sought between activating the campus and addressing issues of equity of access. It was noted that students still valued on-campus experiences; however, flexible learning offered the only viable study option for some students. A minimum standard for flexible learning was required to ensure that it was consistent and of a high quality, and this needed to be adequately resourced and supported.
5. That the University’s narrative and expectations around delivery of flexible learning was very important, particularly in relation to recruiting young academic teaching staff in a challenging and competitive labour market.

6. That the data in the report did not adequately reflect the additional workload that teaching flexible papers generated for staff. However, it was also noted that whilst these papers might be more intensive to set up in the short term, there were efficiencies and rewards to be gained in the longer term.

7. That concerns remained about academic integrity in online assessment. In addition, staff were being asked to be more accommodating in scheduling supervised online tests outside of regular hours, which was adding their workload. There was still a belief that students attending face to face learning had better pass rates than those learning flexibly. However, there could be complex reasons why this might be the case, including other challenges in the lives of flexible learners.

8. That low student attendance in a paper could be due to a number of reasons and did not necessarily mean that the content was not being delivered in an engaging way.

9. That the next phase of this work was to carefully determine how flexible learning could work in each discipline. The intent of the report was not to compel the flexible teaching of any particular programmes. Rather, decisions on which programmes should offer flexible learning would be made at a divisional level. These conversations would be led by the Pro Vice-Chancellors and the Dean of Te Pua Wānanga ki te Ao Faculty of Māori and Indigenous Studies and involve their schools and programmes. Any differences of opinion in relation to specific programmes should be resolved at that level. Any changes to wording in the FLEXI report that might help clarify that position should be picked up with the Pro Vice-Chancellor Teaching and Learning.

10. That CeTTL could provide guidance to the divisions on the viability of flexible learning, and there were other areas around the University with expertise and experience who could also provide support.
